The Principle of Mutual Recognition Based on Mutual Trust and the Respect for Fundamental Rights: The case of the Framework Decision on the European Arrest Warrant

Submission for the ELI European Young Lawyers Award

ABSTRACT

This study examines whether when applying the principle of mutual recognition based on mutual trust a balance should be found between this principle in the case of the Framework Decision on the European Arrest Warrant (FD EAW) and the protection of fundamental rights (FR), and if yes, what kind of balance could be found. A first element stressed is the existence of this problematic issue through an analysis of the mutual recognition principle based on mutual trust in European Union's (EU) Criminal Procedural Law, of the respect for FR at EU Level and the relationship between them in the case of the EAW. Secondly, due to the presumption of compliance by other MS(s) with EU law and specifically with FR, the explicit referral of the grounds of non-execution of EAW and the absence of an explicitly declared and accepted legal basis of the violation of FR as a ground for refusal to execute a EAW the analysis of the relevant jurisprudence at European Level (namely of the European Court of Human Rights and the Court of Justice of the European Union by focusing on the two cases C-659/15 PPU, Căldăraru, and C-404/15, Aranyosi) is essential.. Under this jurisprudence the need and the willing to secure on the one hand the effectiveness of mutual recognition and consequently of EAW' mechanism and on the other hand the protection of FR is affirmed. Consequently, as the obligation to find a balanced relationship between mutual recognition and protection of FR is demonstrated, the elements, which can lead to an effective balance, such as the violation of FR as a ground of non-execution of EAW and the harmonization of national legislation in the area of EU Criminal Procedural Law are examined.

1. INTRODUCTION

Nearly twelve years of practice with the FD EAW¹ have demonstrated that EAW was not only the first but probably also the most important instrument of enhancing judicial cooperation between MS(s) of EU in criminal matters based on mutual recognition principle.

In light of the central presumption that MS(s) should trust each other², there is an objective to limit the restrictions of free movement between them and to create an ASFJ. On the basis of a simplified mechanism³, a MS executes a EAW which is issued by another MS, by surrendering the requested person to the issuing MS.

Although mutual recognition based on mutual trust is the key principle of the FD EAW, its application is limited by the grounds for refusal and other guarantees. It is evident that the concept of mutual recognition is restricted, flexible and quasi automatic. However, so as to maintain the effectiveness of mutual recognition the referral of the grounds for refusal to execute an EAW is explicit.

However, FD EAW is simultaneously one of the most debatable instruments.⁴ Its disputable character is caused by the fact that many issues have been raised on the basis of its interpretation. This concerns maintaining a fragile balance between its effectiveness, in terms of the effective application of the principle of mutual recognition based on mutual trust and the protection of FR.

2. THE PROBLEMATIC ISSUE

Regarding Recital 12 this FD “respects FR and observes the principles recognized by Art 6 of the TEU and as reflected in the CFREU”. Under Recital 13 “no person should be removed, expelled or extradited to a State where there is a serious risk that he or she would be subjected to the death penalty, torture or other inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment”. Under Art. 1(3) the FD “shall not have the effect of modifying the obligation to respect FR and fundamental legal principles as enshrined in Art. 6 TEU”.⁵

Based on mutual recognition principle and the obligation to respect FR the presumption that the issuing MS fulfills its obligation and so the executing MS should rely on this fact and trust the criminal justice system of the issuing MS is justified⁶. Following this mechanism Art. 1(3) can be regarded as a general declaratory confirmation of the obvious obligation of the MS(s) to protect FR when issuing and executing a EAW⁷. Additionally, the effectiveness of the EAW constitutes a priority, which can be endangered in cases of a double control of FR by the executing MS, mainly due to the fact that it is time-consuming.

Notwithstanding the presumption of compliance by other MS(s) with EU law and specifically with FR, mutual trust can be shaken or broken in case of an insufficient protection of FR in the issuing State. This is the consequence of the actual divergent level of protection of FR amongst the MS(s) and the absence of a certain degree of harmonization or approximation.⁸

The literature⁹ based on Recitals 12 and 13 and Art. 1(3) indicates the opinion that the grounds for non-execution are not made explicit and the respect for FR constitutes an additional condition of EAW execution. Consequently, Art. 1(3) allows the executing MS to control/check if the issuing MS respects FR during the criminal procedure.¹⁰

In the area of asylum law, the ECtHR¹¹ and the CJEU¹² have decided that despite the existence of the presumption of protection of FR, serious indications of an insufficient treatment could not be ignored and the issue of FR should be addressed effectively¹³. In contrast with the area of asylum law, there has not been a similar decision in EU criminal law.

However, on 5th April 2016 the CJEU addressed these questions in two cases C-659/15 PPU, Căldăraru, and C-404/15, Aranyosi.¹⁴

In conclusion, due to the absence of a declared clear legal basis and the unavoidable ‘conflict’ between the protection of FR and the effectiveness of the EAW mechanism¹⁵, it is questionable whether, when applying the mutual recognition principle based on mutual trust, a balance should be found between this principle in the case of the FD EAW and the protection of FR? And if yes, what kind of balance could be found.

3. THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN MUTUAL RECOGNITION PRINCIPLE AND THE RESPECT FOR FR UNDER EUROPEAN JURISPRUDENCE

Although the CJEU and the ECtHR have different competences and in the Opinion 2/13 the CJEU rejected the accession of the EU to the ECHR, the CJEU followed the M.S.S. jurisprudence of the ECtHR in the area of asylum law. Specifically, both courts accept the presumption of compliance by other MS(s) with EU law and specifically with FR and at the same time acknowledge how these presumptions can be undermined. Despite some differences both courts seek to reinforce the protection of FR of individuals and have decided that under specific conditions in exceptional circumstances a violation of FR can result in a limitation of mutual recognition and trust.

Additionally, a strong willingness to find balance and a resonant change of the direction of the CJEU jurisprudence concerning the problematic issue in the area of the EAW is evident after its judgment of Aranyosi and Căldăraru. Before these cases the CJEU had not decided upon this matter. Although it recognized the importance and obligation of respect for FR, it did not want to undermine the effectiveness of mutual recognition and did not recognize the violation of FR as a ground of non- execution of the EAW. Nevertheless concerning Aranyosi and Căldăraru cases, under which the CJEU applied the N.S. jurisprudence with some differences, not only can the violation of an absolute FR lead to a refusal of the execution of the EAW. But the executing and issuing MS are also obliged to cooperate and exchange information about the situation in the issuing MS concerning the conditions of detention for the individual requested. The main problematic issue, which remains questionable, is in cases of a violation of a derogable (relative) and not absolute FR the execution of the EAW could be also refused.

In trying to respect and maintain the effectiveness of mutual recognition mechanism and to reinforce the cooperation between MS(s), the CJEU has adopted a more effective balance between mutual recognition and the respect for FR, in other terms in the ASFJ between security (battle against impunity) and freedom (protection of FR)¹⁶, than the ECtHR. In this way it is proven that not only the mutual trust is not blind but also that it is being built between MS(s).

4. THE NEED OF A BALANCE BETWEEN MUTUAL RECOGNITION PRINCIPLE AND THE RESPECT FOR FR IN THE CASE OF THE FD EAW

4.1. The Violation of FR as a Ground for Refusal to Execute a EAW

The EAW mechanism constitutes a distributive intergovernmental process. This means that the two cooperating MS(s) can only have responsibility for part of the procedure which takes place in their territory under the condition that this sharing procedure, in its entirety, assures the protection of FR of the requested person.¹⁷

However, the fact that the EAW mechanism has been adopted under the AFSJ with the aim to reinforce judicial cooperation between MS(s) in criminal matters cannot and should not have as a result the mutual transfer of responsibilities between the issuing and executing MS. The mutual recognition mechanism cannot lead to a bipolar system of judicial cooperation under which the requested person is only the object of this procedure and is left without personal rights.

The sharing procedure of the EAW mechanism consequently has the force of the “Kombinationsprinzip”¹⁸. This means that the executing and issuing MS have the responsibility to assure a certain level of legal protection whereby legal gaps concerning the legal protection of the requested person must be avoided; which have been known to exist due to this cooperating procedure.¹⁹ Indeed, the CJEU affirms this consideration by stating that the executing and issuing MS have the obligation to cooperate in case of the existence of a lack of legal protection of the requested person.²⁰

However, the high level of mutual trust between MS(s), on which the EAW mechanism is based, must also be taken into consideration. The principle that MS(s) trust the criminal justice system of the other MS(s) and the presumption of protection of FR create a likelihood or expectation of legality of the EAW and criminal procedure. Nevertheless, mutual trust constitutes a dynamic concept, and the mutual recognition principle is restricted, flexible and quasi automatic and the protection of FR can be endangered in exceptional cases. Consequently, the presumption can be falsified in exceptional cases.

The obligation of the EU legislator and the MS(s) when they are implementing EU law is to respect FR. Art. 1(3) FD EAW merely confirms that the FD EAW does not oblige MS(s) to execute the EAW when it is in opposition to the general principles of the EU and FR under Art. 6 TEU. The FD EAW must be interpreted, and is interpreted by the CJEU, in that way so as to be in conformity with primary EU law and specifically with Art. 6 TEU²¹.

As a result, the FD EAW excludes the execution of the EAW when the surrender of the requested person is in opposition to FR guaranteed under ECHR, CFREU and the constitutional traditions common to MS(s).

However, MS(s) have the possibility to specialize the above prohibitions by adopting relative grounds of non-execution.²² This must be achieved without adopting other grounds of non-execution which do not come from the FD EAW and endanger the effectiveness of EAW mechanism.²³ Due to the possibility of general suspension of EAW mechanism in cases of a serious and constant violation of FR guaranteed under Art. 6 TEU regarding Recital 10 FD EAW²⁴, there is a real risk of violation of FR of the requested person. This must be assessed in concreto, which is necessary for the EAW non-execution²⁵. Taking into consideration these limitations and above possibilities many MS(s), such as United Kingdom, Austria, Germany and Greece, have adopted under their national legislation the general ground for non-execution of the violation of FR guaranteed under ECHR or under Art. 6 TEU.²⁶

For these reasons the violation of FR constitutes a ground for refusal to execute the EAW in exceptional cases regarding the legal basis of Art. 6 TEU. Although it is not referred explicitly. In my view the CJEU has also affirmed this practice.²⁷ The recognition of the violation of FR as a ground of non-execution of the EAW means that a more effective protection of FR is established in EU and mutual trust is in fact built between MS(s) without being blind and engenders a real and effective cooperation between MS(s). An indifference to the protection of FR would not only lead to a violation of EU law but also to an underestimation of trust and belief in the integrity and efficiency of other MS(s)'s judicial systems. As a result, a balance between mutual recognition principle and the respect for FR in the case of the EAW due to the reinforcement of the cooperation between MS(s) has been found by respecting a fair Unity in Diversity.

4.2.The Need of Harmonization/Approximation over Mutual Recognition?

The main reason why it is difficult to achieve a harmonious balance between mutual recognition principle and the respect for FR is the lack of harmonization/approximation of criminal law – both substantial and procedural. As Gomez-Jara Diez states, the “cart of mutual recognition’ has been put before the ‘horse of harmonization”.²⁸

Through mutual recognition mechanism the aim is to achieve unity at EU level but also for this to be based on a background characterized by diversity. This diversity provides many benefits but also challenges, such as the endangerment of the protection of FR. If this diversity is not managed effectively, for example through harmonization/approximation of the national laws, unity and the means of achieving it such as the mutual recognition will be endangered also. Harmonization facilitates mutual recognition; it is therefore necessary for its effectiveness and reinforces mutual trust. This is the reason why the European Commission has proposed a noteworthy list of Green Papers on harmonization/approximation of criminal procedural law²⁹ and it is explicitly stated under its communication of 19 March 2014³⁰. This begs the question: can a MS recognize and trust upon a logical basis a decision of another MS, which is completely different from its own? The right answer in my opinion is in the negative.

Consequently, the harmonization of criminal law can effectively help find a real balanced relationship between mutual recognition and respect for FR.

Although there is no need to prioritize harmonization over mutual recognition, there is a need to combine the two so as to ensure the effectiveness of the EAW mechanism and respect for FR. Unity in Diversity and a balance between mutual recognition and the respect for FR is possible only if on the one hand Diversity and respect for FR do not endanger the Unity and mutual recognition and on the other hand Unity and mutual recognition do not ignore its being influenced by Diversity and respect for FR.

5. CONCLUDING REMARKS

At EU level there is Unity between MS(s) but it should not be ignored that it is a Unity in Diversity. The existence of this diversity, especially in the area of EU criminal law cannot lead to an automatic and absolute mutual trust. Furthermore, at the EU level, specifically in the case of the EAW, there is the need and an obligation placed on the MS(s) to protect FR. Despite the explicit referral of the grounds of non-execution of the EAW under Art. 6 TEU a violation of FR under specific conditions leads, and should lead, to a limitation of mutual recognition principle and as a result of the execution of the EAW.

Nevertheless, in my opinion the only remarks upon the balance decided by the CJEU are that a limitation of the EAW mechanism should be also applied in case of a violation of FR of relative character. Any violation of FR should be recognized explicitly as a ground of refusal of execution of EAW based on Art. 6 TEU. In this way an even more effective balance would be found.

However, a complete assurance of the protection of FR cannot be achieved only by balancing mutual recognition and respect for FR. Due to this fact a parallel harmonization/approximation of national laws would substantially ensure both the effectiveness of the EAW mechanism and the respect for FR.

In conclusion, a balance between the principle of mutual recognition based on mutual trust and the respect for FR can be found. Specifically the objectives of this balance should be the simultaneous assurance of the effectiveness of protection of FR and the mutual recognition mechanism. This balance is possible, as the CJEU has recently confirmed, but it is also necessary for the creation of ASFJ based on Unity in Diversity.
